January 28, 2013

It's Not Travelocity!

The Obamacare exchange is not Travelocity. The government Exchange is actually a national DATA exchange. It’s an IT superstructure that will collect and send private data on individuals to and from the federal government through a central server, called the “Federal Data Services Hub.”

This Federal surveillance center grabs private data on individuals from state and federal government databases. The USA Today called it the “largest consolidation of personal information in the history of the republic.” The 32 states that have so far refused to build a state exchange are in fact refusing to connect data systems with the Federal Government. If you live in one of these states, thank your governor.