Government Issued Individualized Risk Scores

Obamacare wants to know how healthy you are. Obamacare requires States to create “risk scores” for all individuals. These scores are created using a government tool that predicts the health care costs of each person according to their diagnoses, use of medical care, address, race, sex, insurance coverage and other data.

Many states require insurers to send insurance claims data to the government. State exchanges are allowed to use these databases to create the score, or they can send your data to the Feds to have it done. According to the scores, the federal government will transfer money between various health plans. This fact alone shows how Obamacare is a federal takeover of health care.
