51 Votes is All That’s Needed

As we look toward the mid-term elections and wonder if the Democrats will lose the Senate and the Republicans will keep the House, consider the new filibuster rules. Just three months ago, Senate Democrats changed the rules. Instead of needing 60 votes to end a filibuster, they need only 51 votes. As a result, many courts will be packed with liberal justices.

But the change in filibuster rules can be used to the Republican’s advantage when they retake the Senate and the presidency. Instead of needing 60 votes to repeal Obamacare, they’ll only need 51 votes. This year is the Republican’s best chance in years to retake the Senate and 2016 is coming.
