When the Collapse Comes

One health care policy expert writes:

“I no longer think this economy…is capable of being reformed. I have asked every economist I know about how we get out of [this] mess…including schools that don’t teach, growing numbers of people dependent on government handouts, a regulatory system that destroys entrepreneurship, and [our] impossible debt we have accumulated. Not one has offered anything [close to] approaching an answer…”

“That means the entire house of cards will collapse…After the collapse, the people who will prosper are those who can actually do something of value. We need to find a way that one patient and one doctor can find each other and work out a mutually beneficial relationship. Anything else is just noise.”
