Health Sharing Splinters ACA

Obamacare supporters are raising their voices against health sharing and the freedom of people to help each other pay for medical care. The 500,000 people enrolled in health sharing are exempt from Obamacare mandates and penalties. That’s a microcosm of Americans, but it makes ACA advocates nervous because they want everyone in the government-controlled system.

One article engaged in fear mongering, saying people could be harmed because health sharing isn’t regulated. Another recent article said state insurance officials are afraid that health sharing could destabilize insurance markets by nabbing all the healthy folks. The author says the rise of health sharing “splinters the path ahead” for Obamacare. Perfect.
