The Tally - 28 For vs. 43 Against

In Supreme Court cases, the public can submit Amicus Briefs. Organizations, policymakers and others send carefully constructed arguments hoping to sway the Court. Briefs must be specially formatted, published by certain printing houses, and sent at specific times.

Many Briefs have been sent to the Supreme Court on the four questions surrounding Obamacare. A link to all the Briefs can be found on the Supreme Court website. Twenty-eight briefs urge the Court to rule the individual mandate to purchase health insurance constitutional. Forty-three briefs ask for it to be ruled unconstitutional, including one from a single-payer group. The three-day court hearing begins in four weeks.
