Gorsuch is a Good Choice

Last week, President Trump announced his nominee for the U.S. Supreme Court. Judge Neil Gorsuch, who has served 11 years in the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, is an outstanding choice. He strongly supports the Constitution and the rule of law.

I was excited to learn of his scorn for a certain Supreme Court doctrine called Chevron, which allows federal agencies, not the courts, to determine what a law means if the law is ambiguous -- and to change their interpretation at any time.

Gorsuch has called Chevron an abdication of judicial duty and a delegation of “legislative power to the executive branch.” In other words, a violation of the separation of powers. Gorsuch is a good choice.
