March 14, 2014

Refuse to Reveal

We don’t have health insurance anymore in America. That’s because health insurance for the rare expensive medical condition or injury you hope to avoid is gone. Instead, Obamacare forces insurers to cover all comers, making them simply third-party financiers of medical expenses.

To find out how expensive their new Obamacare enrollees will be, they are “calling, emailing and writing letters to new enrollees, urging them to divulge information about their conditions, prescriptions and even personal habits, often through online forms called health-risk assessments,” reports The Wall Street Journal. Don’t fill them out. The data will be kept forever to profile you. Refuse to reveal.