March 19, 2012

Will the Feds Bring an Army

President Obama’s government health exchange is the heart of his reform. If States refuse to set it up, the feds will find it difficult to implement the law. Joel Ario, the former director of exchange policy for the Administration, says the feds need a certain level of cooperation from the states.

But states can refuse to build this takeover center and they can refuse to enforce federal regulations. One expert doubts that the feds have the manpower to takeover states that refuse to cooperate. There’s a new reason to refuse. A 644-page exchange regulation was just released. It uses the word “must” 1,004 times. If a state says “no” what exactly will the Feds do? Bring an army?

Source: