Homevisiting - Cradle to Grave Tracking

Obamacare provides $1.5 billion for homevisiting, which has been called “cradle to grave tracking of newborns.” Government workers try to visit before or after the birth of a baby. Most parents have no idea it’s a government worker collecting data on their relationships, parenting skills, intelligence, child abuse potential, home safety, and more.

One organization says the following, “As states strive to develop... comprehensive early childhood data systems, home visiting partnerships with [family, friends and neighborhood] caregivers provide opportunities to collect additional data, and strengthen existing data collection.” My advice? Don’t open the door.
