You Know Someone is Deceived by HIPAA When

Last week I was in Philadelphia being interviewed by the local NBC television station with more than 2 million viewers. They invited me to discuss the “HIPAA Privacy Deception.” You can see the deception at work whenever people learn that someone has gotten access to or used their medical data and they say something like, “Well what about HIPAA? Isn’t that a violation of HIPAA?”

Americans think HIPAA protects privacy. And you can’t blame them. It’s often called the privacy law. And the form you’re asked to sign is often called the HIPAA privacy form to say you got the HIPAA Notice of Privacy Practices. But it’s because of HIPAA that you have no privacy. Think about that the next time you see the doctor.
