Today is Last Day of Obamacare Enrollment...Sort Of Obamacare’s last day of open enrollment is today. This is the end of a six-month enrollment period during which the Obama administration and single-payer advocates nationwide feverishly worked to draw people into government-run health care. No one has any idea how many people are actually enrolled and the administration is not talking. Many may have been previously insured but their policies were cancelled.

Meanwhile, some states with their own exchanges – essentially dummy terminals into the master exchange – intend to keep enrolling people. Maryland, Massachusetts, Nevada, Oregon, Vermont and Washington are all working to allow individuals to enroll if they had problems during the open enrollment period. But I say, even these should refuse to enroll.
