ACTION OPP - Feds Want You to Take Your Pills

The Feds want to figure out how to get patients to take their medications. They call this a “public health problem” of non-adherence to prescription medication. By claiming that it’s a public health problem, they open the door to federal intervention, tracking and interference.

Imagine the database they could build using pharmacy data. They could call everyone who gets a medication to check if they’re taking it. They want your ideas in 500 words or less. I suggest that you use just two sentences to tell them it’s none of their business. The deadline is May 7th. To email your comments, find instructions on our home page by clicking on today’s Health Freedom Minute.
