May 10, 2016

We Don't Have Health Insurance Anymore

Because people are afraid of getting sick, many think the one good thing about Obamacare is that people with pre-existing conditions can’t be denied coverage, but this means insurance companies aren’t insurance companies anymore. They no longer insure against risk. They guarantee payment for known conditions by dictate of the federal government.

So the one thing people like the most is what guarantees the federal takeover of health care. Imagine if the government required your home owner’s insurance company to sell policies to people whose houses are burning down, or whose houses have been charred for months. That’s what we’ve now got under Obamacare. It’s not insurance. It’s expensive. And it’s the government.