May 11, 2012

The Intrusive Prevention Strategy

The Obama administration’s National Prevention Strategy is called “an unprecedented opportunity to shift the nation from a focus on sickness and disease to one based on prevention and wellness.”

The Strategy targets cigarette use, eating habits, physical activity, injuries, mental and emotional health, sexual health and alcohol and drug abuse.

This is the government speaking. Imagine how intrusive prevention could be. But prevention is what you do for you, not what government makes sure you do for them. That’s why I’m glad Republicans in Congress plan to defund Obamacare’s multi-billion dollar Prevention and Public Health Fund. We don’t need to bankroll government intrusion in our lives.

Section 4002, Prevention and Public Health Fund, Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, March 2010.