You Can Fly Without REAL ID

You can fly without REAL ID. The Department of Homeland Security cannot force states to impose this federal ID card and to give up state sovereignty over identification, purchasing, travel and movement. But they are working overtime to scare you into agreeing to give up 10\textsuperscript{th} Amendment rights.

Some states like Minnesota are starting to cave. But Homeland Security writes this in a regulation: “…individuals without a REAL ID-compliant document will still be able to enter Federal facilities and board commercial aircraft.” That’s right. You can fly without REAL ID. Stop REAL ID in your state unless you want the federal government in charge of what you do and where you go. Just say no to REAL ID.
