Pornography as Public Health Hazard

On April 19, after Utah passed two bills that declare pornography a “Public Health Hazard,” Utah Republican Governor Gary Herbert signed them into law. One is a resolution and the other has enforcement powers. The Governor said they would bring the dangers of pornography to light and expand research and education.

The new law requires reporting of child pornography to the police by computer technicians who find it during their work. One sociology professor says research reveals that exposure to, and consumption of, porn threaten social, emotional and physical health and show how “porn is a public health crisis rather than a private matter.”
