Penalties Will Impose Controls on Doctors

Forty percent of clinics and hospitals treating Medicare patients will have their payments docked this year because they submitted no data on their patient’s health to the federal government. More than 250,000 providers have also been penalized by pay cuts for not using electronic health records like the government wants them to be used. Hundreds of practices will also have their payments cut for not complying with the complex Obamacare value-based payment program.

These three penalties increase every year. Clinics and hospitals that fail all three federal programs face a combined pay cut of 9% in 2017. This is how the government plans to control your doctor.
