June 18, 2012

Government Violates Law Without Consequence

If you violate a law, what happens? You get a ticket, a fine, jail or prison. Government does not hesitate when you dare to color outside the lines of the law. But when government fails to follow the law, not much happens.

The Department of Health and Human Services has missed nearly half of the Obamacare deadlines. The biggest failure is their decision not to implement the unsustainable CLASS Act which would pay for non-medical services for seniors. It’s still law, but they just decided not to do it. Given it’s Obamacare, we might be relieved, but I wonder if the Department would give each of us the same kind of license to violate Obamacare’s requirements as they claim to have for themselves.