Obama Wants to End Affordable Insurance Option

The Obama administration wants to eliminate all affordable coverage. A new proposed rule would cut people off of inexpensive short-term health policies after only three months.

147,000 people applied for short-term policies last year. People who apply must declare themselves healthy, the policies don’t cover everything Obamacare requires – that’s one reason why they’re affordable – and people who buy them still have to pay the penalty for being uninsured.

But the administration needs more people in the Obamacare exchanges to keep them alive. If the rule is finalized, short-term health policies would only be available for less than three months and people would not be allowed to renew them. Whatever happened to freedom?
