One Year Ago Today

One year ago today, I joined the long winding line of people outside the U.S. Supreme Court to see if I could get inside to hear the ruling on Obamacare. Amazingly, I was one of the last eight people allowed to enter the chamber. As I sat there listening in the hushed room, Chief Justice Roberts ruled the individual mandate unconstitutional.

But after he ruled that we couldn’t be forced to buy health insurance, he said, “But that is not the end of the matter.” And what a turn of the tide! He then ruled that Americans could be taxed for not buying government-approved health insurance. One year ago today, Justice Roberts betrayed his colleagues, America, and the U.S. Constitution.
