Charity Care Being Cut

As Obamacare cuts federal aid to hospitals for providing charity care, hospitals are reducing care to the poor. One hospital says patients “who refuse to purchase federally mandated health insurance when they are eligible to do so will not be awarded charitable care.”

But the Supreme Court ruled the mandate unconstitutional. Hospitals would rather claim the mandate as a reason to cut charity than to reveal that they have never been as charitable as people thought or reveal that federal aid cuts are reducing their reasons for acting charitable. But Obamacare’s premiums and deductibles are too expensive for many of the uninsured. So, who will care for them as Obamacare and hospitals freeze them out?
