Feds Fess Up to More Employee Records Hacked

On June 4th, the federal Office of Personnel Management claimed 4.2 million current and retired federal employees had their records hacked, including sensitive data from security clearance background checks. But now, the department has revealed in testimony that the records of at least 18 million employees may have been compromised. But even that could be low.

Congressman Will Hurd, a former undercover CIA officer writes, “The hypocrisy is that while the government leaves its networks and the data of millions of Americans at risk, it fines private companies for security breaches.” I’ll add that those who are the victims of the breach never see a dime while the federal government reaps millions of dollars in corporate fines.

“U.S. government hacking number sparks unusual drama a Senate briefing,” Even Perez and Tom LoBianco, CNN, June 24, 2015.
