Data Discrepancies Worse Than You Think

The Inspector General of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services investigated the accuracy of data submitted by enrollees in the Obamacare exchange. There were nearly 3 million data inconsistencies, 2.6 million of them that could not be resolved.

By reading the report, I discovered that the Inspector could only determine the number of inconsistencies, not the individual number of applicants with inconsistencies. So the number of enrollees impacted by the data inconsistencies, mostly regarding income and citizenship status, could be higher than 2.6 million. These people may or may not be eligible for Obamacare but right now most if not all of them are getting taxpayer-funded subsidies.
