Bipartisan House Vote to Delay Mandates

If you're following my tweets, you saw a few interesting things from last week's House vote on the Obamacare mandates. First, 35 Democrats joined Republicans to vote for a one year delay of the employer mandate.

Second, only 22 Democrats voted to support a one year delay to the individual mandate, which requires every single person to be covered with nine exceptions.

Third, one Republican voted against both bills. Representative Morgan Griffin in a statement says, "Obamacare can't ever work." But also says, "It's like an abscessed tooth where delaying fixing a problem is not going to make it better, it only makes it worse."

He might have a point.
