Hearing on Hub Reveals No Law

Last week, the U.S. House Oversight Committee held a hearing on the intrusive Federal Data Services Hub. This is part of the national Obamacare Exchange system. If you think of state exchanges simply as data-gathering dummy terminals, then the Hub is the central server to these terminals.

Federal officials testifying called it a routing tool to send data between state agencies, federal agencies, health plans and the dummy terminals, including citizenship, income, and employment. Then it sends all this data to a new federal database. They admitted that no law requires the Hub to exist, yet nearly $400 million has been spent to build it.
