Government Exchanges Won't Sell Private Insurance

The Obama administration uses words to obscure the truth. For instance, they talk about the new federal Health Insurance Marketplace. But the so-called “marketplace” is a government bureaucracy. And the so-called “health insurance” is government health care. By saying this over and over, even reporters think it’s true.

The Wall Street Journal, on the front page, declared that government exchanges are “where individuals can shop for private insurance.” This is not true. If you use the exchange you apply to the federal government under penalty of perjury. The only thing available on an exchange is government coverage. All you can get is traditional Medicaid or the new “Medicaid for the middle class.”
