Fraud is Easy on the Exchange

Last November a Colorado man gave his dog’s name as part of a security question during Obamacare enrollment. The exchange opened an account – for the dog.

Some things don’t change. This month the federal government accountability office carried out an undercover investigation and found that 11 out of 12 fake applicants were able to get Obamacare coverage and federal premium subsidies. They used fake social security numbers and inaccurate citizenship information.

In other words, committing fraud was easy. No wonder the Inspector General found 2.6 million Obamacare accounts that cannot be verified for accuracy. Now, does the administration even care?
