Obamacare to Punish Companies With Younger Workers

Get ready. Companies with 50 to 100 employees face new Obamacare requirements in January. Right now these mid-sized employers have the same freedom as large companies to negotiate their own deals with health insurers, allowing them to benefit from their younger, healthier workers. But on the first of the year, the ACA requires insurance to be priced exactly the same regardless of the health of the employee.

One actuarial firm says two-thirds of employees will see 18% premium increases. One company with 54 employees will have to pay up to $100,000 more. One employer, who says training young workers already costs more, says this will punish companies that hire new, younger workers.
