Is It a Fake Apology?

Bob Kocher, a doctor and Obamacare architect, says he was wrong about part of the law. He thought consolidation of physicians into large groups was “inevitable and desirable.” But now that it’s actually happened, he thinks it’s a “barrier to better care.”

He says “small, independent practices” know their patients “better than any large health system ever can.” Well, that’s convenient. Dr. Kocher is a director of a company that runs Obamacare Accountable Care Organizations made up of small medical practices and he’s a partner at a venture-capital firm specializing in the health data services that these practices need under the law. So, is his apology really an apology, or just an advertisement for his services?
