400 Doctors Quit

Yesterday I talked about the cost of computerized medical records. Now Dr. David Cossman reports a shocking statistic. He writes that a whopping 400 doctors have quit his hospital rather than learn how to use the complex electronic medical record.

He says computerized patient records make mistakes no human ever could. He says it’s a tsunamiic drain on productivity. He says it will dehumanize medicine. It’ll limit human and eye contact by forcing doctors to focus on inputting data rather than fully evaluating the patient. What are your experiences?
