Employers Plan To Restrict Access To Medication

As a result of the 40% Obamacare “Cadillac Tax” coming in 2018, 55 percent of large employers plan to limit employee access to specialty medications in 2016. Prior authorization and use of specialty pharmacies will be required instead of drugs being given during a hospital or clinic visit where the cost may be bundled and less transparent. This may mean less access to medications and more out-of-pocket costs.

Think about the freedom you could have if you had your entire compensation in wages and the power of your dollars in your own hands or if you bought your own insurance policy, joined a health-sharing group, or like the Amish, saved and negotiated significantly lower cash prices for your care.
