Is your Doctor Prohibited From Taking Cash?

A book details how a woman lost her life twenty years ago when her health insurer refused to cover needed care and then refused to allow the family to pay cash for that care. The insurer’s contract with the hospital only allowed payments from the health insurer. Now, two weeks ago, a research specialist wrote the following in The Wall Street Journal, “There is a clause in most doctors’ contracts with insurance companies that states that they cannot charge a covered patient directly for any service without submitting a claim first.”

Is your right to pay restricted by your health insurance company? Ask your doctor about their freedom to accept your cash with or without insurance -- and consider moving from health insurance to a health sharing organization.
