Who Will Like ACA and Who Won't

A reporter interviewed health plan executives about premium prices under Obamacare. One lobbyist, discussing the coming rate shock said, “Up front, some will have to pay more. But over time the shock disappears.” So he thinks we'll all just get used to being fleeced by Obamacare.

Another executive said, “The people who are going to do well under [Obamacare] are people where someone else is paying part of the premium.” He said, “If you get a subsidy and the government’s paying, you’ll probably like it. If you’re buying health insurance as an individual now and you’re not subsidized under [Obamacare], you’re probably not going to like it.” Whatever happened to Obama’s promise of lower prices?
