September 10, 2012

Doctors Shun Medicaid Patients

Obamacare adds 30 million people to Medicaid, the entitlement program funded by states and the federal government. But a recent government study found 31 percent of forty-three hundred doctors saying they won’t accept Medicaid patients.

Physicians refuse Medicaid because of low government reimbursements. In other words, they don’t get paid enough to cover the costs. That’s a pretty good reason to say no. How long would you work without enough pay? Most doctors begin their medical life with around one hundred fifty-eight thousand dollars of debt. For some, it can be as high as $300,000. These 30 million people will be covered under Obamacare, but it sure doesn’t look like access to care is in their future.
