Hacking of Citizen Data in Federal Agencies

For almost 20 years, the Government Accountability Office, or GAO, has said federal data security is a problem. Now they've issued a report saying hacking of citizen data from federal agencies has doubled in five years, most sharply in the last two years. The GAO criticized the seven agencies saying only “two agencies notified affected individuals for all high-risk breaches.”

In other words, many Americans had their private data hacked but the government hasn’t told them. This means the Obamacare exchange database is a sitting duck for hackers. Security agencies have already told Congress it should be shut down. So please don’t enter your data into the website. It’s not safe.

“Federal Agencies Need to Enhance Responses to Data Breaches.” Testimony to U.S. Senate, GAO, April 2, 2014.
