Feds Want Every Baby’s Genetic Code

The federal government wants every baby’s genetic code. $25 million has been granted to four institutions to develop newborn genomic sequencing. This process would eliminate genetic privacy. The entire genetic code would be analyzed, recorded, and filed with the government. The child would never have a say in the matter.

Outsiders could interpret the child’s future at birth and judge the lifetime cost of the child. There would be no putting the genetic genie back in the bottle when the child grows up and learns his privacy was taken from him. This should never be allowed to happen, not to any child. The grants must be rescinded.

Presented daily by Twila Brase, President, Citizens’ Council for Health Freedom.