CCHF: Supreme Court Wrong to Refuse 10-State Health Care Worker Vaccination Appeal

ST. PAUL, Minn. — On Monday, October 3, 2022, the Supreme Court refused to take up the 10-state appeal against the Biden administration’s vaccination rule for health care workers in health care facilities that receive federal funds. Twila Brase, RN, PHN, president and co-founder of the Citizens’ Council for Health Freedom (CCHF), responds:

“The Supreme Court’s decision to refuse to block the Biden administration’s vaccine mandate for health care workers is wrong. It’s an abuse of government power, it’s a violation of individual bodily autonomy, and it forces American health care workers into a deadly game of Russian roulette if they want to or need to keep their job. With more information emerging on the lack of proven safety and efficacy of the jab, and with the new booster in play, more American health care workers are going to be forced into a ‘jab or job’ situation.

“This is a crisis for health care workers and their patients. The continued vaccination mandate has also put the lives of hospitalized patients at risk, as more nurses and other health care workers are likely to opt to leave their job behind, exacerbating already dangerous staffing shortages. Furthermore, if health care workers are harmed by the vaccination, they too will leave their jobs behind.

“The government now admits that these experimental mRNA genetic vaccinations do not stop the infection and do not prevent transmission. Furthermore, as the VAERS database makes clear, the Covid shot is not safe and effective for too many people whose lives have been lost or changed forever post-vaccination. Refusing to take action against this abuse of government power continues to expose the 10.3 million health care workers under the mandate, and endangers their patients.”
