January 14, 2011

Hungry Patient Told to Buy Own Food

Welcome to the Health Freedom Minute. This is Twila Brase, president of Citizens’ Council for Health Freedom.

Here is a story from Australia you will hardly believe. Last June, a patient at one of Sydney’s biggest teaching hospitals was told that the hospital had run out of food and he should walk to the 7-Eleven or McDonald’s if he wanted to eat.

Malcolm Jorgensen, who was being treated for a serious staph infection was sent out by nurses in the rain at 11:00 p.m. with a needle and cannula in his arm. He had no umbrella.

He walked 1500 feet from the hospital, bought food and returned drenched. He said he was shocked to be sent out. The hospital claimed it was a busy night and the food distribution system failed. I'll say. This is socialized, government-run medicine. If they can mess up the food, imagine what they can do to medical care.

Listen again at healthfreedomminute.net.

Source: “Hungry patient had to send out for food at Royal Prince Alfred Hospital,” Gemma Jones and Amy Harris, The Daily Telegraph, June 3, 2010.

The Health Freedom Minute is heard weekdays in Minnesota at 7:03 a.m., 11:03 a.m., 2:03 p.m. and 5:03 p.m. on WWTC AM1280 The Patriot.