Welcome to the Health Freedom Minute. This is Twila Brase, president of Citizens’ Council for Health Freedom.

As I said yesterday, we need real-life stories to show policymakers what our government is doing to citizens. After you listen to today’s story, please send me yours if you have one or know someone who does: Go to: www.healthfreedomminute.net.

Today’s story is about unwanted house calls by Center for Disease Control surveyors. A woman told me she’s been approached three times to answer questions from the government’s National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES). The surveyors sit in cars on the street and wait until they see her or her husband emerge. The survey can include a physical exam. She has said no three times, but they say they can talk to neighbors.

Do you have a story about this survey? Send it to me using the feedback box at www.healthfreedomminute.net. That’s healthfreedomminute.net.
