Is Artificial Intelligence Directing Your Treatment?

Do you want artificial intelligence to make medical diagnoses and issue treatment protocols? On March 28, the White House laid out a set of new standards for government agencies that use artificial intelligence. When Vice President Harris made the announcement, she used the VA, the Veterans Administration, as an example. She said if VA hospitals want to use AI to help “diagnose patients, they would first have to demonstrate that AI does not produce racially biased diagnoses.” But shouldn’t accuracy for all be the hurdle?

The VA is already testing AI, but veterans may not know algorithms are being used. The White House will require agencies to disclose AI and its risks and performance, and to give people the ability to opt out.
