Parents Should Decide Vaccination, Says Florida

On September 3, 2025, Florida's surgeon general said Florida would be dropping childhood vaccination mandates, likely in early December. All vaccination mandates not required by state law, will be lifted.

These include vaccinations for chickenpox, hepatitis B, influenza, pneumococcal disease and H. influenza. Vaccines mandated by law, such as measles, mumps, rubella, polio, diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus, will still be required. Florida is the first state to move away from the vaccination mandate for school attendance, and it should not be the last one. Parents have a right and an obligation to make decisions about materials injected in their children's bodies. Parents not government should decide.
