Is High Tech Really the Solution?

Dr. Oz, says the Medicare administration tries to “run a bit more like a tech company.” Is that good news? During an interview he also discussed plans to bring technology into general health, prevention, and the practice of medicine.

Today’s technology, he says, will “allow us to accomplish goals that generations of practitioners and administrators have been trying to achieve.” He claimed the ability to access patient data from anywhere and transparency is essential for a health ecosystem.

Is it? How about getting back to a personalized, high-touch, patient-centered, mission of medicine? Technology has made health care unaffordable. Since Dr. Oz was heavily invested in health technology stock, is he using his position to build the system of his dreams?
