Of Course, Canadian Health Care is a Mess

Ninety-nine percent of nearly 650 practicing Canadian doctors say disconnected health systems negatively impact care. 48 percent have seen patients with missed diagnoses and unnecessary disease progression. 97 percent have intervened when patients followed false information online.

Canadian patients wait weeks, months, and years for critical care in Canada. Of course, they're seeking advice online. But given how long it takes for patients to be seen, they are probably following online advice – good or bad -- long before a doctor intervenes.

Whenever someone yearns for socialized medicine and looks north, tell them that even Canadian doctors say they can't give good or timely care. Then point them to the independent doctors at JointheWedge.com.

“Disconnected health systems and misinformation are putting patient care at risk, say Canadian physicians,” Oksana Kishchuk, Abacusdata, April 21, 2026: <https://abacusdata.ca/disconnected-health-systems-and-misinformation-are-putting-patient-care-at-risk-say-canadian-physicians/>
