Banish the Scribe - Exam Room Advice

When the government mandated that doctors use digital medical records, doctors found it difficult. And they could no longer look at their patients. To solve this issue, they hired medical scribes, individuals that walk in with the doctor and type the visit into the medical record data system.

But what if you don't want a third person in the room? What if you don't want an outside listener or a recorder? You can banish the scribe.

Simply tell your doctor that you don't want anyone else in the room during your visit. The scribe will have to leave. So speak up and don't take no for an answer. The scribe is a violation of the confidential exchange and a violation of the sanctuary that the exam room is supposed to be.
