First-Ever Detransitioning Clinic Opens in Texas

The first-ever clinic to help children detransition will open in Houston, Texas. The clinic is opening in October due to a 10-page settlement agreement with state and federal authorities. The hospitals must also stop transitioning services and offer discounted or free restorative medical care.

The attorney representing children who were mutilated from gender-affirming procedures said, "Many detransitioners need specialized care for the rest of their lives to cope with the damage of lost body parts and the ability to function normally." The care will be provided to patients who received transition procedures through age 21, as well as OB/GYN care for those over age 21. The hospital must also pay more than $10 million.
