Will the Vaccine Injury Clinic Actually Open?

Today, you're voting and likely wondering who told the truth, so I suggest praying for guidance before you vote.

Speaking of truth, it's not clear that a new center in the federal government to research vaccine injuries is actually open. The federal government said the clinic to study people with vaccine injuries opened on October 5. Several weeks later, the clinic was not open, but a news report said its purpose had expanded to include long-term symptoms post-infection, such as Long Covid.

On Oct 26, Dr. Mary Talley Bowden got an email from the federal government saying the new clinic's vaccine injury study, called MOSAIC, was not yet open for enrollment. Might I suggest they open it quickly, lest the results of the election shut their doors in January.
